Talk on Power Companies

By R. L. Cummings of West Paris

Who skinned Sam Insull? Perhaps Editor Staples can give you the information, but he don't seem to like me.

It seems on the outside that after he had got all of these power plants like the Central Maine, that pays 19 1/2% on its common stock and can distribute $200,000, to its friends for personal services to carry a Maine Election, that they some- how tripped him up and according to his statement as reported they are going to take him and all his scalps and trophies to some camp, to the public as yet unknown, for their use as school for ever.

There are some clues that if properly followed up we feel will give the desired knowledge. The U. S. Senate seems to be wise to the fact instantly so that its conference committee on the tax bill had a chance to do some very remarkable things. The Senate has passed a 3% tax to be assessed on the electric companies who have even been increasing their dividends during the years of the depression. It was to be 3% on their gross earnings. This conference committee, consisting of prominent Democrats and the stand out Republican Mormon Senator from Utah changed the tax from the electric companies earnings to a direct tax on the bill of the user of electricity for domestic purposes, thereby exempting the rich manufacturer and placing it on the homes of the people.

Here is what Senator Norris of Nebraska, the old war horse that has grown gray in his defense of the rights of the people, has to say of the matter: "If there ever was a deliberate expression of selfishness in the Senate it was expressed upon the amendment we adopted to the bill providing for taxation of power companies. Our conferees take the tax off this great giant, this monopoly, this trust, which is making more money than anybody else, recently lift the burden of taxation which the Senate wanted to put on this trust, and where did they put it? Upon the homes and little stores all over the United States."

Isn't it strange that both Senator Hale and White from Maine voted for the final adoption of this measure? Notwithstanding the undisputable fact that we are paying three times the price we should pay for our lights and power, these monopolies are by this act shielded from taxation, and the great users of power, while political, assess it on the homes that use it now at three times the cost that the manufacturer pays. You find yourself servants to obey, his servants are.

Business is dead because as we all know, people have nothing with which to pay. For the goods they want, yet these blind leaders are forcing additional taxes on those that cannot now pay and taking them off the great monopolies that are now profiting beyond all limits of reason.

They are driving our ship of State directly for the rocks with a stupidity that passes understanding. If the people remain docile under these conditions, led by the propaganda put out for their consumption, then we will eventually be plunged in revolution, for actually shows that the longer oppression and concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few continues the more violent is the overthrow.

LOVELL

The Washington Bicentennial was celebrated by the schools of Lovell at the graduation of the eighth grade, Friday, June 10, at Lovell village. This consisted of a pageant written by H. A. D. Hurd, music supervisor. The program was as follows:

Prologue, "Stepping Stones to Greatness". The Cherry Tree (Truth) in which young George cut down the cherry tree and refused to tell a lie.

A Knave Changes the Destiny of a Nation (Obedience) in which George was given a knife as a reward for his promise to his mother that he would respect her wishes and not go to sea.

Surveying in the Wilderness (Accuracy) in which young Washington was seen as the careful surveyor.

Washington at Valley Forge (Invocation) where he was seen at prayer and the spoken petition was offered by Rev. C. V. Cross followed by the singing of "Grant Me True Courage Lord" by the pupils of the North Lovell school. With the exception of the invocation, the prologue was given by the pupils of the Slab City school.

Episode one. Washington Crossing the Delaware, Dec. 25, 1776. Given by the boys of the village school and followed by the singing of "Washington's Christmas Party" by the North Lovell pupils.

Episode two. "The Birth of the Stars and Stripes" was a beautiful representation of the famous picture by that name. This was shown by the Center school pupils during the singing of "Lovely Maid on Spinning", and "Hail, Glorious Banner" by the North Lovell pupils and instrumental music, "The Star Spangled Banner".

Episode three. An evening at Mt. Vernon. General and Mrs. Washington were shown being entertained by music, "My Daisies Have Been Most Wonderful Fair", sung by two boys from the village school and two violin solos, also by pupils from the same school. The minuet was danced by eight small people from the village primary school.

Episode four. Washington Attends a Choral Concert in Philadelphia. Here Washington was seen being entertained by the chorus of all the pupils in town singing contemporary music as follows:

"O Servants of God," Hayden, 1793-1899.
"Grant Me True Courage Lord," Hurd 1855-1790.
"Happy Pilgrims," Mozart 1756-1791.
"Early Morning in May," Beethoven 1770-1827.
"Creation Hymn," Addison-Hayden.

Episode five. This was very impressive. Washington standing on the highest pedestal, directly below him the Goddess of Liberty, still lower symbolic figures representing Religion, Science, Education, Agriculture and Art, and in front of these were the soldiers of the wars of the United States, 1776, 1812, 1849, 1861, 1898, 1917. Music, America, all pupils in town standing back of group.

Immediately after the finale, Mrs. Sadie Flint, chairman of the school board, with a few well chosen words, presented the diplomas to a graduating class of eight: Lester Stearns, Louise Seavey, Yvonne LaRoque, Eunice Adams, Iva Kendall, Dorothy Hutchins, Marcia Plummer and Elford McAllister.

The gray colonial costumes of the children made each scene most delightful. The music, which was directed by Mr. Hurd, reflected much credit on the excellent instruction the pupils have received. While the success of the pageant was due to the efforts of the children primarily, they could never have done so well without the hearty cooperation of all the townspeople and the hard work of the teachers. The school department is deeply grateful to them.

The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in dancing, music being furnished by Gus and His Gang, who kindly gave their services.

Mrs. C. E. Littlefield and son Robert left for Oswego, N. Y., last Monday, for a few weeks' visit with her brother, Noah Nason.

Wm. Hamlin carried Mary Cash, Edith and Millie Wiley and with Gordon Curtis, were also representatives from Otisfield. An unusually interesting session was enjoyed. The keynote of all the addresses was the importance of interesting the children and the young people of high school age in the church and Sunday school and the best method to adopt was to provide clean, harmless, social activities, also to always, in whatever place you meet them, greet them with a hearty welcome, to make them feel you consider them part of every service, that they are much needed and you cannot get along without them. When pastor and people realize this as they should, there will be more children and youth in our churches and Sunday schools. The chalk talk by the President, Mrs. Lulu Lloyd, was fine and intensely interesting. A most excellent dinner was greatly appreciated by all visiting scholars.

W. F. Smith suffered an ill turn last Saturday morning and a doctor called but he soon improved. His son, Elmer Smith, and wife, from Auburn, Verner, wife and daughter Beverly from West Paris, called to see him Saturday afternoon. So great was the excitement when fire broke out at the home of Dr. T. M. Shroyer at Thunkirk, Thio, that no one thought to call the fire department.

HAD THEY BUT FAILED

An old man stood at the window. While the agent listened in. To the terrible news from the battlefield. Where Ed and slaughter reigned. German shells are falling in Paris. And the bitter and gloomy news. The heart of the world was staggering. From the Kaiser's fatal blow. That terrible drive of the Germans. Had broken the lines of France. And the nation's pride lay open wide. As her conquering foe advanced. Two untold American divisions. As a slender prop and the only hope. To save a war-torn world. On this line of untold fancies. Withstand the veterans' shock! From the Kaiser's pride lay open wide. The world in shame to mock? We hear the Marines are fighting. The Germans are stopped at the Marne. And we hold our breath while the tales of death. We read with a stony calm. Then steadily grinding backward. The German line is hurled. And the boys from across the ocean. Have rescued the staggering world. Back from the Hells of Belgium. On this line of untold fancies. Just home to rest and a place to forget. The years they have spent in Hell. But alas, the great for profit. For millions on millions piled. The story from from Australia. Has sent the whole world wild. Now broken in health or in poverty. To keep the wolf of hunger and cold. From the humblest of the world. There are billions to save the rich man. In his plans for further gain. The story from from Australia. Comes back from this cry of pain. Had they but failed in that death-strife. Beneath the heel of the conqueror. Would be stamped as the left in clay. There's a mighty storm abrewing. It's a cry for a chance to live. That nature to man can give. 'Tis the restless tide of the millions. And the Stars will fight in their courses. Till truth comes green and gold. —R. L. GUANING.

Megishoo

"The ship is here! The ship is here!"

Megishoo was sitting in the grass playing with her Eskimo puppy. She scrambled to her feet at her brother's cry and raced after him.

Every one was laughing and laughing as he hurried to the shore. The white ship from America had been there only once before, but all the Eskimos remembered the visit.

"Come, let us take the kayaks (ki-yaks) and visit the white men," suggested Nookapingwa, the father of Megishoo. In a few minutes there were a dozen long, slender boats skimming over the water to the ship where they were eagerly welcomed.

Megishoo ran to the very edge of the water. She had been only a little girl when the American ship had visited her country before. Now she was eight years old.

"Well, well, here we are again," said a big tall man. This was Mr. Mack, the captain of the ship. He slapped the men on the back, greeted the women, talked to the sailors, plump babies the mothers carried on their backs, and then shook hands with all the children.

"Oh, candy!" cried Megishoo looking into her hand after Mr. Mack had passed her. "Candy, American candy," laughed the other children.

One of the men from the ship suddenly put down a big black box he had been carrying. It stood on the top of three long poles.

"Come here," he pointed the black box at her and stood waiting behind it. Megishoo backed away from him. She shook her black hair violently and her black eyes opened wide with fright.

"It's all right, Megishoo," said Captain Mack. "He wants to take your picture."

"Here," he held up the camera. "The black box might go off." She did not know what might be inside of that strange machine.

"That's a good girl," said the captain. "Now just think of the fun you will have visiting the ship. I have a present for you, too."

At this Megishoo's round, rosy face widened into smiles. She did not notice a click from the black box.

"There, that's fine," said the captain as he swung her down again. "The next time the ship comes here I will bring you a picture of yourself."

Megishoo could not understand such wonderful news. Who, in Eskimo Land, had ever heard of a picture of oneself?

"Here come the presents," said Captain Mack, as a man carrying a big bundle joined the group. The man untied the bundle and began to take out some packages.

"Here is a present for Megishoo," said the captain. He put a shining piece of wood and metal into her hands.

"Put it up to your lips and blow in it," said one of the men. Megishoo puffed and blew first one way and then another, but she could not make any sounds. Her cheeks puffed out and grew red and she almost lost her breath. Suddenly the instrument made a noise.

"Oh, Megishoo make music!" she said with a happy smile. And in a few more minutes she could play the harmonica easily.

"The Bangle Necklace Puzzle"

WOTACE

The young daughter of a certain man and woman was a very bright child, and wanted to help her parents in every way she could. Now her father was very anxious to find out what her mother wanted for a Christmas present, but could not get her to tell him what to buy. He appealed to his daughter, who promised to do what she could for him. She took a bangle necklace she told him to watch the initials bangles that made her necklace. One evening she pointed to it and put her finger to her lips. Her father tried for some time to make sense out of the arrangement of the letters, and finally succeeded. Can you do the same?

Many thanks for Mother Optomist's kind words. I think her little poem was very nice and wish everyone could see it in every way she could. Now her father was very anxious to find out what her mother wanted for a Christmas present, but could not get her to tell him what to buy. He appealed to his daughter, who promised to do what she could for him. She took a bangle necklace she told him to watch the initials bangles that made her necklace. Dear Corner Cousins: Well, I will try it once more—but what shall I write about this time? Everybody seems to be very busy just at this time of the year, painting, papering and cleaning, while some are working in their flower gardens, where the faint perfume of flowers and woodland are wafted to them on the gentle breezes of May. Here are a few lines I read the other day I think is very pretty.

The Yellow Violet

When woodcock buds begin to swell,
And crocus the first to reveal,
The yellow violet's modest bell,
Peeps from the last year's leaves below.

Her sweetest fields their green resume,
Sweet flower, I love, in forest here,
To meet thee, when thy faint perfume
Come in the air.

Of all her train, the hand of Spring
First plant thee in the sunny meadow,
And I have seen thee blossom
Beside the snow-banks' edges cold.

The parent sun, who had thee view
Two sides, and chiding moisture slip,
Has bathed thee in his own bright light,
And crested with jet thy glowing lip.

Thy slight thy form, and low thy seat,
And earthward bent thy gentle eye,
Thou' the poorest of the flower tribe,
When lo! thou art the flower of the year.

When lo! thou art the flower of the year,
And down the road the bolting spring trips,
And in the middle of a bubbling stream,
And then I wake of from a terrified dream.

I sit up at the time gives a jerk,
And red in the face, I say, what work
I hear my mother's voice ring out,
As I pull from the river a big fat trout.

As the maple tree goes tap, tap, tap,
In the lullaby land of the night,
The grass is soft and like a bed,
And the wind whistles like a bird.

All of a sudden the lullaby trips,
And down the road the bolting spring trips,
And in the middle of a bubbling stream,
And then I wake of from a terrified dream.

I sit up at the time gives a jerk,
And red in the face, I say, what work
I hear my mother's voice ring out,
As I pull from the river a big fat trout.

As the maple tree goes tap, tap, tap,

He appealed to his daughter, who promised to do what she could for him. She took a bangle necklace she told him to watch the initials bangles that made her necklace. One evening she pointed to it and put her finger to her lips. Her father tried for some time to make sense out of the arrangement of the letters, and finally succeeded. Can you do the same?

Many thanks for Mother Optomist's kind words. I think her little poem was very nice and wish everyone could see it in every way she could. Now her father was very anxious to find out what her mother wanted for a Christmas present, but could not get her to tell him what to buy. He appealed to his daughter, who promised to do what she could for him. She took a bangle necklace she told him to watch the initials bangles that made her necklace. Dear Corner Cousins: Well, I will try it once more—but what shall I write about this time? Everybody seems to be very busy just at this time of the year, painting, papering and cleaning, while some are working in their flower gardens, where the faint perfume of flowers and woodland are wafted to them on the gentle breezes of May. Here are a few lines I read the other day I think is very pretty.

The Yellow Violet

When woodcock buds begin to swell,
And crocus the first to reveal,
The yellow violet's modest bell,
Peeps from the last year's leaves below.

Her sweetest fields their green resume,
Sweet flower, I love, in forest here,
To meet thee, when thy faint perfume
Come in the air.

Of all her train, the hand of Spring
First plant thee in the sunny meadow,
And I have seen thee blossom
Beside the snow-banks' edges cold.

The parent sun, who had thee view
Two sides, and chiding moisture slip,
Has bathed thee in his own bright light,
And crested with jet thy glowing lip.

Thy slight thy form, and low thy seat,
And earthward bent thy gentle eye,
Thou' the poorest of the flower tribe,
When lo! thou art the flower of the year.

When lo! thou art the flower of the year,
And down the road the bolting spring trips,
And in the middle of a bubbling stream,
And then I wake of from a terrified dream.

I sit up at the time gives a jerk,
And red in the face, I say, what work
I hear my mother's voice ring out,
As I pull from the river a big fat trout.

As the maple tree goes tap, tap, tap,
In the lullaby land of the night,
The grass is soft and like a bed,
And the wind whistles like a bird.

All of a sudden the lullaby trips,
And down the road the bolting spring trips,
And in the middle of a bubbling stream,
And then I wake of from a terrified dream.

I sit up at the time gives a jerk,
And red in the face, I say, what work
I hear my mother's voice ring out,
As I pull from the river a big fat trout.

As the maple tree goes tap, tap, tap,
In the lullaby land of the night,
The grass is soft and like a bed,
And the wind whistles like a bird.

All of a sudden the lullaby trips,
